The repercussions of the U.S. withdrawal here, as symbolized by the Marines' departure, are likely to go far beyond Jordan.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt already has put the Reagan administration on notice of the vast political effect on all the United States's allies in the Middle East, In an interview with The Washington Post about two weeks ago, he described the Marines' departure as "a disaster" and said, "You're going to lose the confidence of all your friends in the area."

President. Reagan seemed well aware of this implication of his decision to redeploy the Marines. He said in a newspaper interview this month that "if we get out, it also means the end of any ability on our part to bring about an over-all peace in the Middle East and I would have to say it means a pretty change in Soviet position regarding disastrous result for us worldwide. Egypt, under Mr. Mubarak, has

Report Criticizes U.S. Administration For Bid to Limit Technology Exports

By David Burnham New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - A report to the National Academy of Sciences has concluded that the Reagan administration's effort to restrict the flow of technology to foreign countries is far more restrictive than the limits recommended by an academy panel 18 months ago.

The report also said the new reassessment could be the restora-tion of full diplomatic relations basis of incomplete and possibly erroneous information. The report was prepared by the

Iraq Says Its Jets Struck Tankers At Kharg Island

BAGHDAD — Jet fighters of Iraq's air force on Monday attacked an undisclosed number of oil tankers anchored at Kharg Island, Iran's strategic Gulf oil terminal, an official Iraqi announcement

In Washington, a State Department spokeswoman said of the Iraqi report, "We don't have any reason to doubt that the reports of attacks on Iranian tankers are true," although she said the attacks had not been officially confirmed. About 90 percent of Iran's oil exports, which total about 1.7 million barrels per day and are the main source of funds for Iran's war effort against Iraq, are shipped from the Kharg Island terminal. The Iraqi spokesman, reading the communiqué, said the raid was in "fulfillment of a threat made by lraq earlier this month and to punish the Iranian regime for attacking our people and our territories."

The spokesman vowed that "we will continue our attacks until the enemy halts its aggression and agrees to abide by the UN Security Council resolutions" calling for an end to the war, which started in September 1980.

The spokesman said, "We warn that we will strike at the appropriate time all Iranian targets on land and water as a punishment for the regime which insists on its aggression against our country.

Iraqi forces in past months have attacked a number of vessels en route to Iranian ports at the northern end of the Gulf. President Ronald Reagan warned last week that he would use U.S. warships stationed in the Arabian Sea to prevent Iran from closing the strait. Britain has indicated it might join the United States in such a blockade.

Mr. Chernenko first was referred to as head of the defense council by the army chief of staff, Marshal Nikolai V. Ogarkov, at a Kremlin Armed Forces Day reception last week, according to West European military attaches who attended the reception.

The official press has not referred to the second title, which Mr. Chernenko presumably would have assumed when he became general secretary.

MANCHESTER, New Hampshire - The Rev. Jesse L. But the Democratic candidate denied that he was in any way anti-Semitic or anti-Israel.

⁴I was shocked and astonished that this ethnic characterization made in a private conversation apparently was overheard by a reporter," Mr. Jackson said Sunday night. The candidate, who is black, reminded his audience at Temple Adath Yeshurun that blacks and Jews had worked against discrimination in the South in the 1960s.

Mr. Jackson appeared to be wellreceived by the capacity crowd and was interrupted several times by applause.

He repeated his assertions of early last week that there had been death threats made against him and that his campaign headquarters had been attacked.

Blacklist Data

The Action Followed Queries by Reporter

By Howard Kurtz Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — A senior U.S. Information Agency official ordered the disposal of internal documents relating to a "blacklist" of outside speakers days after a reporter first inquired about the list late last month.

The USIA general counsel. Thomas Harvey, said Sunday that he had directed subordinates to throw out all surviving copies of 135 weekly lists of proposed agency speakers that included written comments on the proposed speakers by top USIA officials.

Mr. Harvey said that he had not reviewed the documents before issuing his instructions, was not aware that they contained com-ments by officials and believed in retrospect that the papers should have been retained.

The destruction of the internal papers is the first indication that some agency officials may have tried to cover up details of the blacklist episode to minimize its political fallout.

Mr. Harvey said he had asked that the weekly reports be thrown out because "we shouldn't be trying to look for scapegoats."

WORLD BRIEFS

Mauritania Recognizes Polisario State

NOUAKCHOTT, Mauritania (Combined Dispatches) — Mauritania on Monday recognized the Saharan Arab Democratic Republic, the political entity of the Polisario guerrilla movement in the Western Sahara.

Disagreement over the Western Sahara issue caused the collapse of an Organization of African Unity summit in July 1982, and the most recent OAU summit last June took place only after the guerrilla movement agreed to stay away in exchange for a guarantee that the issue would be delected.

On Monday in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, the current OAU chairm Lieutenant Colonel Mengistu Haile Mariam, opened a meeting of African foreign ministers Monday with a plea for contributions from nitrails. states to stave off the most serious financial crisis in the organization's II.

U.K. Rejects Threatened Union Action

LONDON (Reuters) — The foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, told Parliament Monday that, despite the threat of nationwide protests, the government stood by its decision to outlaw unions at the government communications center that monitors Soviet bloc radio traffic.

The ban affects up to 10,000 employees, including radio operators and translators. It has prompted protests among many trade union members who were planning strikes and rallies Tuesday that could disrupt transport, industry and government departments:

Sir Geoffrey repeated government claims that industrial disruption at the center had hampered intelligence gathering seven times from 1979 to 1981. He said more than two-thirds of the employees had already accepted the government's offer to abandon union membership in exchange for a payment of £1,000 (about $1,400).

Salyut Cosmonauts Surveying Earth

MOSCOW (Reuters) — The three Soviet cosmonants aboard the orbiting space station Salyut-7 on Monday began a new work program of photographic Earth surveys and use of a gamma telescope.

Colonel Leonid Kizim, Vladimir Solovyev, the flight engineer, and Dr.

Oleg Atkov, a cardiologist, are in good health and feeling well after 20 days in space, Tass said. They used cameras and a spectrometer to survey the Earth's surface in the region of the Carpathians, the Cancasus and Siberia, the agency added.

Tass also said that the work was being carried out for economic reasons, indicating that the cosmonauts were compiling a map of likely underground mineral resources. The gamma telescope was put to use for the first time in an experiment to measure gamma radiation and charged

A final weekend of polling by The Washington Post and ABC News showed Mr. Mondale's lead over Mr. Hart slipping to 7 per-centage points, with Mr. Glenn another 10 points back. Dotty Lynch, the Hart campaign pollster, said Monday that on the basis of her own latest data, "it is possible that we could finish within 10 points" of Mr. Mondale.

But the possibility of an upset was once again discounted by Jeanne Shaheen, Mr. Hart's New Hampshire manager. "Mondale has just too big a lead," she said. "We've had a lot of movement, but I don't think we can close the gap in Cathy Rodgers, Mr. Mondale's deputy campaign manager here, and Jerry Morris, Mr. Glenn's state press secretary, both said that weekend canvassing had confirmed 'some pickup" in support for Mr. Hart, who has been doing well since his surprise second-place finish behind Mr. Mondale in the Iowa precinct caucuses a week ago. Labor and the Court escape for companies stuck with high-cost labor contracts? The Supreme Court has now ruled that union contracts can indeed be abrogated as part of an effort to save a company in a "Chapter 11" reorganization. But organized labor argues that bankruptcy is becoming a ploy for union busting. It wants Congress to exempt union contracts from renegotiation.

Employers might indeed be tempted to use bankruptcy to deny labor the fruits of collective bargaining. But the Supreme Court had reason to conclude unions are as well protected from abuse as other creditors. If reorganization in bankruptcy is to work as intended, to save both jobs and creditors' assets, labor contracts should remain part of the process.

When Continental Airlines asked a bankruptey court for protection against creditors last September, its union contended that the company's main goal was escape from its labor contracts. The unions lost the argument in court, but their case struck a political nerve and the new Supreme Court decision is not likely to east the pain.

The justices said that a "somewhat stricter standard" should be applied to collective bargaining agreements than to other business contracts. But it rejected one lower court's view that labor contracts could be set aside only as a last resort. The Supreme Court instructed judges to strike a balance of equities in deciding how much sacrifice should be expected of various creditors, including unionized workers, to keep a company affoat,

The court relied on its reading of existing law. But a deeper logic supports the judgment. Jobs can be preserved only if a company con-tinues to operate. If wages are exempted from

Should the bankruptcy laws be a path of scape for companies stuck with high-cost lacreditors for their concessions. In the airlines, where labor contracts represent most of the uncollateralized debt, exempting unions would more quickly lead to liquidation rather than reorganization.

The unions say they can be asked to save jobs with voluntary concessions. But saving jobs is not always a union's first concern. At Continental, the national unions were more worried that wage cuts would set a precedent for reopening contracts with other airlines. That may be why union members at Continental were given no chance to vote on the company's last offer before it chose bankruptcy.

Labor, sensing that its best shot in an election year lies in a quick vote in Congress without even committee hearings, has pro-posed an unworthy deal. It would support conservatives who want to remove bankruptcy protections from consumers if they will let the House rush its vote on the labor amendment. The unions would then lobby to have House and Senate conferees accept the amendment, bypassing a direct test in the more hostile

There may indeed be room here for constructive reform. Unions might be required to let members vote on proposed concessions when their employer contemplates bankrupt-cy. Unions might be assured an expedited judicial review of concessions drawn from them by bankruptcy judges. But these ideas need discussion. No worthy reforms can come out of the backroom maneuvering now under way. The House leadership should hold out for a more deliberate process.

A UN Role in Lebanon

Relief for Social Security

fund reserves are low

Pretty much on schedule, a call has gone up to bring the United Nations into Lebanon. It tends to happen at about this time, when Western enterprise has fallen on hard times and a face-saving way to avert greater collapse is needed. At the Security Council, a French resolution is being worked on. It would extend — in the beginning, at least to the Beirut area and to Palestinian refugee camps — the mission of the 6,000 UN soldiers who have been keeping the peace in southern Lebanon since the Israeli invasion of 1978.

If the mandate of the UN force is to be altered, however, the agreed purpose will not be simply to replace the multinational force, whose components (American, British, French, Italian) are now leaving on their respective political calendars. The purpose of the multinational force — to strengthen the Ge-mayel government and, meanwhile, to try to inch it toward power-sharing — has been over-taken by the cruel events of the last few weeks. The only UN peacekeeping strategy that would be politically feasible now would necessarily have to be approved by Moscow, which otherwise can and assuredly will block any change. Such a strategy will require substantial slices of Lebanese national power to be allot-ted to the Moslems and Druze. Syria's and the Soviet Union's clients in Lebanon. The Reagan administration can see the slippage in its own position in Lebanon, but it is not eager to have the United Nations expand its role in a way that will accord the Russians the sort of larger and formal say in Middle East affairs that a revised UN mandate would imply. It continues to hope that its friends in Lebanon will somehow not have to pay the full political cost of their misfortune.

In New York, nonetheless, U.S. officials have entered into the bargaining over the terms of the French resolution. They are, for instance, resisting the Soviet effort to go beyond the evacuation of the multinational force and to force the U.S. Sixth Fleet out of Lebanese waters as a condition of bringing UN forces into Beirut and the Palestinian camps.

In the best of circumstances, however, the United Nations is bound to come to Beirut only slowly. There is widespread agreement that there must first be a Lebanese cease-fire and the establishment of some Lebanese political authority or consensus, in addition to Security Council agreement on a peacekeeping mission. In brief, there must be some kind of peace to keep. Poor Lebanon remains a long

Reaganism Opens Rifts Among U.S. Classes

WASHINGTON — Social historians will note that at the mid-February gala for Princess Grace, an event the press described as "a glitz blitz of spectacular proportion" attended by notables from the president and first lady down — or up, depending on the rank accorded the royalty present — a Secret Service agent watched guests pass through a metal detector. "It takes a heavy chunk of gold to set off this machine," he said. Gold there was, and diamonds. sapphires. rubies and other precious stones, in what was reported to be the most conspicuous display of wealth seen here since President Reagan's inaugural festivites.

Among the touches provided at this charitable $5,000-a-ticket function for the Princess Grace Foundation, according to a Washington Post reporter who covered the event, were toilet bowls filled with chopped carnations. "After they were flushed," she wrote, "a hotel maid sprinkled more fresh flowers in them."

Perhaps that glimpse into the mores of Washington in the mid-1980s represents nothing more than one way in which the rich and powerful, or some of them, anyway, occasionally choose to spend their time in this affluent world capital. But it does convey another message that bears on the presidential stakes of 1984: The way in which economic class lines are lengthening during the Reagan era.

Two other recent events have dramatized that condition and guaranteed sharper political de-bate in days to come. One was the Census Bureau report of the sharp increase in the number of Americans living below the poverty level. The other was the Supreme Court's landmark 5-to-4 ruling affecting union contracts. It gives companies filing for bankruptcy the right to cancel labor union contracts without having to demonstrate the sharp of the sh By Haynes Johnson strate that those contracts threaten the companies' ability to survive. U.S. labor unions have been in trouble for years. Their membership is declining as a propor-tion of the work force, their once-mighty political power wanes, their standing with the public sinks lower. The ruling deals them another major blow after they sustained a series of setbacks threatening the very course and nature of labor-management relations.

Since the strike 31/2 years ago of U.S. air controllers resulted in replacement of union members by nonunion personnel, labor unions have been reeling. Faced with threats of plant closings, unions have accepted lower wage levels, decreased benefits and altered work rules. Companies have learned that merely raising the pros-pect of filing for bankrupacy often enables them to win significant union concessions.

Now, with the Supreme Court ruling, companies can use bankruptcy as a device to abrogate contracts once thought inviolate. Unions are faced with the harsh knowledge that protections they believed secure for their members are no longer so. And U.S. workers, after decades of moving up the economic ladder, find themselves having to accept lowered standards of living.

They also know as one of the shrewdest observers of U.S. labor-management relations remarked, that the threat of using bankruptcy "has cast a shadow over the bargaining table."

Arnold Webber, president of the University of Colorado and a former special assistant to President Nixon and executive director of the Cost of Living Council during the Nixon years, makes several thoughtful points about labor-management relations after the court ruling. How management interprets the current situation is ex-tremely important, he says, especially with unions clearly weakened and on the defensive. His advice to companies is: Don't overplay your hand. Understand that unions have had, and will continue to have, a useful, proper place in this complex democratic society. Further, understand that what unions find they cannot win at the bargaining table they will try vigorously to resolve through the political arena.

And, he adds, all of this "has a tincture of a lass issue to it."

Which is exactly how unions are responding. Kenneth Young, a key AFL-CIO strategist, says the labor federation has been warning its members about dangers inherent in a second Reagan term. He cites the Supreme Court as an example.

In four more years, given the age of the present justices, Mr. Reagan could appoint as many as five new members to lifetime terms on the bench, thus putting his stamp on the U.S. judiciary for the rest of the century.

"You can be sure that we're going to make the point even more sharply," Mr. Young said, "about what can happen in a second Reagan term when he doesn't have to play the moderation game and can do what he really wants."

All of this suggests that the 1984 election promises to be the most polarizing in memory, with voters dividing along economic and racial class lines.

If scenes of the "glitz blitz" in Washington reflect the new political currents, people at the top are displaying behavior and a social consciousness reminiscent more of imperial Rome than of democratic America. They are growing ever more remote from those at the bottom.

Some Prescriptions for Europe's Present Danger

This is the second of two articles.

Less than a year ago Congress enacted a or so from now, the trust funds should have BRUSSELS — In 1952 at Lisbon the European allies agreed they sufficient reserves to make it through the tightest period before legislated tax increases begin could not match Soviet conventional to build up the funds later in the decade. forces in Europe but instead would And, if economic conditions in the United offset them by relying chiefly on the States become very bad, the law now contains U.S. nuclear deterrent, which then a safeguard that keeps benefit cost-of-living was almost a monopoly. adjustments from outpacing wages when trust

But by 1967, that monopoly had eroded to near parity, and it was feared that the strategy of massive retaliation, which depended on an overwhelming U.S. edge, was no longer credible. The Russians could try lesser forms of intimidation or aggression to which a massive nuclear strike would be a totally inappropri-

Therefore, NATO changed to the strategy of flexible response. The new strategy was designed to provide not just one alliance response to aggression — a strategic nuclear one — but a range of possible reactions proportional to the challenge. The range included conventional defense, a range of theater responses and a general strategic nuclear option. Conventional forces, theater nuclear forces and strategic nuclear forces became the triad on which NATO depends for deterrence.

Over time and in the face of the continued Soviet buildup in all three of these areas in the 1970s, however, each component of the triad developed vulnerabilities.

properly shored up. Ammunition stocks are not adequate, or sufficientstandardized between forces, and there are insufficient reserves capable of quick mobilization. NATO's air defense also needs improvement.

If the two world wars tell us anything, it is that conflicts start at the lower, not the highest, levels. A "nuclear Pearl Harbor" is not the greatest danger, but rather an updated version of the summer of 1914. If the allies are not strong enough at the lower, conventional level, the Russians could miscalculate that they can make lim- of conventional forces. ited moves in a crisis and produce faits accomplis. They may equate conventional military weakness with weakness of resolve.

tactics in World War IL But that conflict was not quickly resolved, and we cannot afford another - conventional or nuclear. Neither can the allies in Europe be placed in a position of having to yield to Soviet in-

At a meeting in December, NATO defense ministers recognized the need to improve conventional defenses as a sort of insurance policy

The ministers are committed to shoring up conventional defenses and making them more sustainable. NATO then could rely on an enhanced and credible conventional force backed up by the threat of possible later nuclear recourse, rather than on the possible early use of nuclear weapons for deterrence. Newly available technologies - so-called smart weapons and better surveillance techniques - provide addition-al ways of reinforcing deterrence through improving the performance

Beyond strengthening the conventional leg of the deterrent triad. Most important, NATO is remaining true to the goal for which it was originally established — the prevention of war in Europe. It pursues every avenue for relaxing international tensions and improving relations with potential adversaries.

Many people say that the leaders of the Soviet Union do not want war. I believe that. But no one in the summer of 1914 wanted war either. The lesson of Sarajevo is that we must ensure that war comes neither by calculation nor by mistake.

EC Deserves Better

Regarding the report "Unity in EC Remains Just A Dream" (Feb. 23):

If Paul Lewis would at least have given some credit to the European Community's considerable achievements — unparalleled in the history of Europe — his lamentations about some of the EC's present difficulties might have made more sense.

NICOLAAS GROENHART.

Mr. Lewis explains that European unity remains a dream, since language differences prevent barbers, bakers, carpenters and plumbers from moving around the European Community, since the percentage of "European" Europeans has dropped dramatically between 1973 and 1983 (from 30 percent to 29 percent!); and since on busy days there are still long queues at the European Community gates at Heathrow Airport.

We agree that the EC is facing urgent political problems, but Mr. Lewis fails to address these problems, nor does he provide any insight into possible future solutions."

Allow us to make two points: First, an increasing European unity under the pressure of common difficulties is a likely scenario for the near future of European integration (remember the way in which the United States became united?). Second, the failure of politicians to step up the speed of integration does not preclude important developments outside political

ROME—President François Mit-terrand's proposal for a Europe-an space station is raising consider-able interest in Italy, in defense circles and among the supporters of European unity. The debate on a common European defense is becoming more lively as the European election campaign approaches. A merely theoretical debate, until now. Only a score of European federalists believe that the American nuclear umbrella may be replaced, or complemented, by an

But now Mr. Mitterrand has pointed to the core of the problem. He said in the Hague that if Europe succeeds in launching a space station capable of detecting any opposing threats to its security, it will have made a gigantic step towards its own defense.

The French proposal is relevant for two reasons. First, because it is increasingly acknowledged that a nuclear arsenal not complemented by a space system loses most of its effectiveness. Satellites are vital for communicating with nuclear forces, for targeting missiles against the enemy and for ensuring early warning of an attack. Therefore the two superpowers, who already possess highly sophisticated satellite systems, enjoy a consequence that was unforeseen un-huge military superiority over all other nations, including the minor nuclear powers. In the future, the arms race in space between the United States and the Soviet Union will tremendously increase the gap. Only a common effort by the European nations to build their own space defense system might, perhaps, and partially, restore the balance between them and the superpowers. With his message Mr. Mitterand has announced an indisputable truth. But the second important fact is that the French implicitly recognize that without a space defense system - that they cannot afford by themselves — their nuclear arsenal will become obsolete.

The "force de frappe" is a deterrent only if the missiles, penetrating the enemy's defenses, may cause an intolerable amount of destruction. If the potential adversary, benefiting from a space system, can make his territory almost invulnerable and still retain an enormous destruction capacity with his nuclear weapons, then the deterrent has lost most of its value, The arms race in space will have a duce the difference, in military power, between France and Britain, on one side, and the other Western European states that have renounced nuclear weapons, on the other. Thus scientific and technical achievements in the military field may revive the idea of a common European defense policy among nations of more equal military capacity. The French may not be prepared for that, but the idea of a common

European defense in space has been launched at the most authoritative French level. The proposed space system is not only intended to protect would enormously enhance the French and British nuclear forces. The Europeans know this. Mr. Mitterrand's proposal is interesting, but it entails a huge cost and presupposes a common will

The debate that has started in for by American taxpayers. West Germany is low-key compared to the political confronta-tions and demonstrations last year over NATO's new nuclear missiles. But the discussions reflect the search by West German leaders for a new national consensus on deopposition Social Democrats from fense, one that would prevent the becoming more critical of the strat-egy of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

The postwar West German vision of deterrence has been that any military engagement would quickly escalate to nuclear exchanges, a prospect so horrible that, according to classic beliefs, war would never be initiated by the Soviet Union. It has enabled West Germany to avoid painful discussions of conventional warfare in since of conventional warfare in Grant Union and Conventional warfare in Grant Union Convention Con

In debates inside NATO over the years, the West German attitude has been to resist any shift away from heavy reliance on nuclear deterrence, any move that might, in the words of an experienced diplomat, "make Europe safe for conventional war."

Now. however. NATO leaders recognizing that the strategy of quick use of nuclear weapons is politically unpalatable in the West and therefore perhaps less credible in the eyes of Soviet planners — are moving to bolster conventional defenses so that NATO could resist a Soviet attack for weeks without resorting to nuclear retaliation.

Jimmy Cliff: Tuning People Into Reggae

By Michael Zwerin International Heraid Tribune

PARIS — For someone ob-sessed with roots, Jimmy Cliff probably the biggest reggae star remaining after the death of Bob Marley - has been chasing after his own in a disorderly fashion.

He has recorded in the country music bastion, Muscle Shoals, Alabama; his first European tour in 1968 consisted of, as he put it, "about two-thirds American black music and one-third reggae": he once hired Chris Kimsey, the producer of the Rolling Stones' record Tattoo You," because he thought "I need more of an English ear"; his popular soul ballad "Many Rivers to Cross" was recorded by Linda Ronstadt. Joe Cocker and Harry Nilsson. And his current hit single "Reggae Night" (from "The Power and the Glory," CBS) is more funk than reggae.

"Reggae Night." went nowhere when released in the United States last fall. But this year it began to hit in Europe. Currently No. 5 on the RTL chart in France, No. 3 in Italy, and moving up in both places, it is one of those annoyingly simple, repetitive, catchy melodies you almost resent for having so insidious-ly invaded your head.

"I made it with a motive," Cliff said last week, on a promotional tour of France. Italy. Spain and the Netherlands, "to open a door. It's a reggae topic with American rhythm. Now I have a lot of listeners I didn't have before. People are tuned into reggae that weren't

Exporting the Sun in Provençal Fabrics

By Hebe Dorsey

T) ARIS - Brigitte Bardot discovered them in a small Saint-Tropez shop. Jacqueline Onassis decorated her country place with them. Pierre Cardin bought 800 meters of them for his Cannes villa and Picasso used to wear shirts made of them.

The story was one of humble fabrics. But suddenly, thanks to Souleiado, a major exporter of Provençal fabrics, naive, cheerful country prints are making a big comeback, even in Paris where they were not exactly chic. In the United States, which accounts for 22 percent of the $5.3-million business. Souleiado is a hit, both at Bloomingdale's and in 18 Pierre Denx boutiques coast-to-coast.

Souleiado - the name in Provençal means "sun ray bursting through the clouds" -- is owned by Charles Demery, who built a worldwide empire out of the modest Provencal mouchoirs - or oversized kerchiefs worn by French peasants at country markets.

Based in Tarascon, the tightlyknit family includes Deméry, 70, who handles finances; a son, Jean-Pierre, in charge of designing, and two daughters, Régine and Chris-tiane. Deméry's second wife, Annie, handles personnel. Christiane, who runs the Paris showrooms and looks after exports, is the spokeswoman for the company.

It all started in 1938 when Demery, an engineer by profession, bought from his uncle a small, 18th-century cotton business employing only five people. Its business was copying Indiennes — the brilliantly colored cotton paisleys "Reggae music is a cry of the that came to France from India. These became so popular that Louis XIV's finance minister, Jean-Baptiste Colbert, decided to protect the French silk industry by ning the import and manufacture of the so-called "painted fabrics." This, however, did not apply to this region of Provence, then under papal sovereignty, where many small industries were able to survive.

Souleiado was one of them. The success of this firm, which now includes pretty much everything from home furnishings to fashion, is based on a number of factors. One is a library of 40,000 fruitwood blocks, reportedly the world's largest collection in private hands and second biggest after Mulhouse's Museum of Printed Fabrics. They provide the basic inspiration for the exuberant patterns, mostly flowers, paisleys and geometrics. The color range, originally limited, now takes in at least 250 different hues, including 75 shades of blue.

walls with printed curtains. Still, according to Dive, "the French are not only conservative, they pinch pennies. They prefer heavy velvets to thin, and thinwearing cottons. We're getting around that one by giving them quilted cottons."

Almost everybody, including the Demery family, agrees that Souleiado would not be what it is today without Pierre Deux, which stands for a couple of talented, U.S.-based, French decorators, Pierre Léveque and Pierre Moulin-Deméry discovered them 10 years ago in Greenwich Village, where they had an antique shop. They are re-sponsible for combining the bril-liantly intricate Soulciado fabrics with the best of Provençal antiques, Moustiers pottery and other objects and delivering a cohesive and delightfully warm Provençal look

From New York, Dumonlin who next July is coming up with a book called "Pierre Deux's French Country" — confirmed that Provençal is a thriving market, a "sort of love affair, because when Americans think of the French countryside, they think of Provence. The difference with Paris is that Americans prefer very bright, happy colors. In home furnishings, dark col-

earing Price Fall, Farmers 1 U.S. Seek Record Output

By H.J. MAIDENBERG New York Times Service

EW YORK - Unless a climatic disaster like last year's drought in the grain belt occurs this season, the growers of the three major U.S. crops, corn, wheat and soybeans, will try to set production records. If they seed, it would cheer inflation-watchers and bring gloom to the inistration just before the November elections.

In usual, the grain and oilseed markets did not learn the ners' planting intentions from the farmers themselves or the ernment, despite the pains that the Agriculture Department s at this time of year to survey and report on what and how .h the grain and cotton farmers plan to grow. Rather, grain chants and traders moni-

Washington has extended the deadline for the payment-in-kind program.

o does E.S. Finley, presit and chief executive offiof International Commod-Export Corp. He is a ling fertilizer exporter, but tudies domestic sales for clues to overseas market trends.

Our latest figures show that farmers will be trying to maxioutput this season in order to offset the expected decline in ket prices," Mr. Finley said. "While current grain and bean es are somewhat higher than a year ago, farmers apparently not counting on this situation to obtain at harvest time." pecifically, he expects fertilizer sales this season to total 47 ion tons, up 7 million from last year. This would make 1984 best sales year for the industry since 1980, when farmers used nillion tons.

st year's low fertilizer use resulted not from the severe drought that started in July but from the "payment in kind" reduction program Washington created to reduce burdene surpluses and thus aid hard-pressed grain and cotton

Based on the fertilizer sales figures and, of course, weather nitting, we expect this year's corn crop to come in at eight on bushels, compared with 4.2 billion in 1983 and the nearrd 8.3 billion the year before, when the weather was good,"

e also forecast a total wheat crop of 2.25 billion bushels, at on increased sowing of winter wheat last autumn. Last on's total wheat output was 2.4 billion bushels, with the ing crop reduced by drought. In 1982 a record 2.8 billion rels of wheat were produced. Mr. Finley, who has an enviable rd as a crop forecaster, projected a soybean crop of two on bushels for this year, compared with 1.5 billion in 1983 a record 2.2 billion the year before. a record 2.2 billion the year before.

verseas, he expects China to continue to be the biggest orter of fertilizer as Beijing strives to increase its rising level od production. "India is also using more imported fertilizers the same purpose, but Latin America continues to be a populating market because of foreign-exchange shortages," Finley said.

nerman L. Levin, agricultural research chief at Paine, Web-Jackson & Curtis in Chicago, said: "Farmers will certainly new best to raise production this season, no matter what they are as their planting intentions. The soybean and cotton ers have already confounded everyone by giving figures ating that, somehow, 5 million acres have vanished in the ne government also appears concerned that farmers will try set output records at a time when export demand is at best al. Thus. Washington extended the deadline for farmers to up for this year's 10 percent planting set-aside program to h 16, from Feb. 24.

r example, corn growers who sign up will be assured an age support price of $3.03 a bushel if they leave 10 percent of land idle. Last Friday the average cash corn price was $3.30 shel, and that price could plunge if a huge crop is harvested. any corn growers who do sign up will try to "grow" the lost in the futures market, Mr. Levin said. He explained: "The ige corn grower works 500 acres (200 hectares). If he agrees is 100 bushels per acre. Many farmers have indicated that intend to buy at least one 5,000-bushel corn futures contract ake up for the lost yield." so, Mr. Levin added, the farmers would be hedging. If the es price rises, they would gain income on their contracts that i offset their reduced yield. If the futures price drops, ever, their loss could be softened by the Federal support

For Anheuser, Beer Isn't Traveling Well

LONDON - Anheuser-Busch Inc. is the world's largest brewer. It commands 33 per-cent of the U.S. market and calls its Budweiser brand "the king of beers."

None of this appears to impress the average German beer drinker.

"There is no demand for any obscure beer brand in Germany," explains Paul Wendler of the Bonn-based German Brewers Association, recalling Anheuser's 1981 market test in Berlin. Besides, he says, as politely as possi-ble, "the image of American beer is not all that good."

Oblivious to such scorn, U.S. brewers tra-ditionally have all but ignored the overseas market. They generally were satisfied with their home market, which accounts for about a lifth of world demand, and were kept busy gobbling up weaker rivals.

Now, however, only a handful of major brewers remain, and the U.S. beer market has gone stagnant. Lawrence Adelman, an analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds Inc. in New York, estimates that U.S. sales volume grew just 0.8 percent last year. Imports were the only healthy segment, expanding 9 percent, So Anheuser and, to a lesser extent, Philip Morris Inc.'s Miller Brewing Co. are looking For St. Louis-based Anheuser, which began to explore the foreign market seriously four years ago, the sales contribution so far is meager. "You can't even find it within the context of the total corporation," says Arthur Kirsch of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.

Anheuser notes that the dollar's strength has made its beer pricier in overseas markets. But industry analysts and executives say the slow progress also reflects Anheuser's late start, its choice of low-risk markets, the lowly reputation of American beer, a legal tussle with Czechoslovakia and, at least in Berlin, the company's marketing style.

Nonetheless, the "king" has had some success. In Canada, where Budweiser is brewed under license by Labatt Brewing Co., an-

The talks were another step in the long-running effort to increase the amount of American beef and oranges that can be shipped into Japan's shel-tered agricultural market.

Government officials said further negotiations were needed, but the two sides expressed measured optimism that an agreement could be reached before the current U.S.-Japanese four-year pact on these commodities expires in March.

Whether the U.S. side gains anything on the beef and citrus issue pales into insignificance next to the yawning U.S. trade deficit with Japan, which was $19.6 billion last year. Yet, given Japan's increasing-

New York Times Service NEW YORK - Carl H. Lindner, the Cincinnati financier, likes to hand out index cards with neatly typed sayings. One of his favorites reads, "I don't understand balance sheets very well, but I do understand people very well."

Mr. Lindner perhaps understates his financial acumen. As founder and leader of American Financial Corp., he has long been considered shrewd in the business world. Now, as chairman of Penn Central Co., he has apparently showed that sharpness again, leading Penn Central into Mesa Petroleum Co.'s battle for control of Gulf Oil Corp. grow in that area. If, however, Mesa ends up selling its Gulf shares, Penn Central can force Mesa to buy back the warrants at a profit of as much as $30

"They're taking cash and putting American Financial's annual reve- it to work in an opportunity that is vastly hedged relative to the downside risk," said Kemp Fuller Jr., an analyst with Moseley, Hallgarten, Estabrook & Weeden inc., who has been recommending the purchase money to do what many think he of Penn Central stock. The immediate impact is a potentially greater return on their cash and marketable securities." The decision to back Mesa's bid for Gulf was apparently not made hastily. Michael D. Brown, a managing director of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., said that his firm was hired as an advisor to the Mesa group "a couple of months ago" and that, by then, T. Boone Pickens Jr., Mesa's chairman, "had already had discussions with Carl about potential investments."

Nonetheless, Penn Central does not plan to follow the route of American Financial and buy major blocks of other companies, according to Keith M. Perkins, its vice esident for public affairs.

"It's just an opportunistic investment that came along," he said. "Our main line of business is in the energy and technology fields, and we have to grow those businesses." At American Financial, what distinguishes Mr. Lindner from others with similar investment strategies, such as Carl C. Icahn and Irwin L. Jacobs, is that he is more willing to stick with a company for the long haul. In the case of Penn Central, for said, "and he has a great deal of patience in waiting to find and realize the gap in what he buys and its true value."

Occasionally, Mr. Lindner does go for the quick profit. He reportedly increased his already major stake in Gulf & Western Industries after the death of its chamman, Charles G. Bluhdorn, a year ago this month. At the time, the shares traded at $20.25 to $24.875. When American Financial sold a block of million shares back to Gulf & Western last November, it collected $29.25 a share — $1.50 more than the market price at the time. Jury Is Still Out on Apple's New Microcomputer

James McCamant, co-editor of the California Technology Stock Letter, estimates that Apple could sell as many as 500,000 Macintoshes by the end of September, the close of its fiscal year, if the company can make them that fast. He expects Apple's sales to climb to about $1.5 billion, or more than 50 percent above last year's $982.8

Apple, however, is far more conservative about its prospects. A spokesman, Barbara Krause, declined to give production figures for Macintosh, but estimated that the company would sell 200,000 to 250,000 units by the end of the calendar year. Apple last week added a second shift to its highly automated production plant in Fre-mont, California, pushing its daily potential output to more than 2,000

The enthusiasm building for the Macintosh has helped Apple recap-ture a bit of the momentum it lost to IBM last year, according to Infocorp, a research concern in San Jose, California. It forecasts that Apple will finish 1984 with 25 percent of the market for desktop computers in the price range be-tween $1,000 and $10,000. The Macintosh is priced at $2,495.

end of last year, IBM's share was 24 percent and Apple's 25 percent.

One thing in Apple's favor, analysts say, is the fact that sales of IBM's PCir, which was introduced last Nov. 1, have disappointed some dealers. Many report excess inventories and are cautious about future orders.

Perhaps most surprising are the strong endorsements of the Macintosh by large dealers in business computers and dozens of consultants to major corporations, many of whom attended the Office Automation Conference here last week.

Don Tapscott, a computer systems consultant for Systems Group, which is based in Toronto. said, "It's poised for a stunning SUCCESS.

The Macintosh does present problems for business users, he added. Its memory, at 128,000 characters, is too small to run multifunction programs such as the Lotus 1-2-3. Also, it does not include among its type fonts the 10point style favored for business correspondence.

However, several companies are working on software improvements that promise to make the Macintosh highly appealing to businesses in about six to nine months, Mr. Apple's 25-percent market share Caswell said. There will be programs to manage several functions at once, including dialing telephone calls, connecting with existing computer systems and recalling and adding information from a variery of computer files, he said.

Many companies, after looking at the Macintosh, have concluded that the more powerful Lisa 2, with its greater memory and speed, is better than the Macintosh

Seymour Merrin, president of Computerworks Inc. in Westport, Connecticut, said. "They are really 'Big Macs,' the 'Mac' for big business." The most expensive Lisa, the 2-10, carries a price tag of $5,500.

Still, the Macintosh has the potential to succeed with big business as well as home users.

James H. Carlisle, president of Office of the Future Inc. in Guttenberg, New Jersey, and a consultant to First Boston Corp., Chase Manhattan Bank and Xerox Corp_ said. The information system directors at the Fortune 500 companies who are looking comparatively at technology will be hard-pressed to recommend the IBM PC for future purchases over the Macintosh and Lisa series if they haven't already adopted IBM as a standard."

MADAME DE SEVIÇNE: A Life and Letters

By Frances Mossiker. 538 pp. $22.95 Knopf, 201 East 50th St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Audrey C. Foote

F OR three centuries the letters of the Marquise de Sévigné have been relished for their charm, wit, dramatic anecdotes and vignettes of the Sun King's realm. But romantic readers have also searched them for answers to the puzzles of her life. Why did this rich aristocrat, so early widowed, never remarry? Why did this passionate beauty of Louis XIV's permissive society not take a lover? Why did this doting mother neglect her lively affectionate son and yet write hundreds of extraordinary letters to a daughter regarded by most of their contemporaries as haughty and heartless?

Frances Mossiker, a Splendid Century specialist ("The Affair of the Poisons") has freshly translated Madame de Sévigne's letters, selecting and excerpting for the first time less for their literary or historical merit than for their psychological interest. These letters are inter-woven with a thorough recital of the events of her life; the result is a very revealing and often poignant biography which suggests some plausible answers to the perennial questions. The first marriage did not set a good precedent: Henri de Sévigné had wit, grace, a title and lands in Brittany, but unique among the gallants of his time, he was immune to his wife's charm. He enjoyed boasting of that fact and of proving it in a series of flagrant liaisons financed largely by his neglected wife's fortune. When this shabby career was cut short in a duel over a certain "belle Lolo" the marquise was heartbroken —according to some biogra-phers. But here we have letters in which she writes of her "calm and happy enough" first year of widowhood, and of her unfortunate experience in marriage; she even cynically re-marks, "A young widow is not greatly to be pitied, she will enjoy being her own mistress — or changing masters."

Emerging from her Breton chateau in 1651, this young widow dazzled le tout Paris (this was before the court moved to Versailles) with her beauty, warmth and wit. She was praised by poets and sought by suitors, among them her lively cousin Count de Bussy, the heroic Marechal de Turenne and the powerful finance minister, Nicolas Fouquet. Though she embraced them all as friends, the only favors granted, apparently, were her loyalty and her letters. (Some were lucky enough to be bothrecipients and subjects of those letters, especially the otherwise unfortunate Fouquet, whose trial for treason and malversation is one of her most famous narratives.) It appears she was as reluctant to bestow her heart as her

It has always been suggested that Madame. de Sévigne's excessive passion and pain weresomehow her less popular daughter's fault, but there is no basis for that here. Though her letters were lost. Françoise Marguerite was as conscientions a correspondent as her mother and, while reserved by name, satisfactorily. demonstrative in her letters. Their quarrels, either in print or in person during their infrequent but long visits to each other, quite clearly originate with the possessive, apprehensive mother, for all her wit and charm, she cannot refrain from begging her daughter to curb the count's ardor and his extravangance. And ifthe marquise was right to dread the many debilitating pregnancies and the eventual bankruptcy, her warnings caused nothing but

But why did Madame de Sévigné develop and sustain such a consuming and agonizing passion for a child so cool, intellectual, introverted, frail, self-sufficient in her happy marriage — and except for beauty, so unlike her mother? To that, the letters give no clues. Great passions always seem illogical and most-ly they are painful and unfruitful, but sometimes there are marvelous by-products, usually in the arts. In per novel, "The Cannibal Galany," Cynthia Ozick has a character rephrase the classic judgment: "Madame de Sérane's unreasonable passion for an undistinguished daughter had turned the mother's prose into high culture and historic treasure."

Audrey C. Foote is a critic and translator living in Washington. She wrote this review for The Washington Post.

COLLEGE PLACE, Washington - The Battelle Northwest Laboratory has devised a robot, the Cubot, that solves Rubik's Cube in four minutes. It grasps the cube in two arms, rotating it to scan all six sides, and an optical camera that distinguishes color sends information to a computer brain for the solution.

Navratilova Staying High and Dry

By Jane Gross New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Virginia Wade's eyes crinkled and she smiled as she observed last week that Martina Navratilova "doesn't even sweat, except for maybe one little wet patch on her

Wade seemed to be joking, yet as she spoke all her companions focused on the quarterfinal match at the U.S. Women's Indoor tennis championships. Sure enough, deep into the second set against Pam Casale, the world's No. 1 player was dry as a bone.

After years of being regarded as a physically superior but emotionally fittery player who fell apart in the middle of matches and wept after losses. Navrarilova has become the most dominant player on the women's circuit and, some would argue, in the history of the game. Her training techniques, supervised by a retinue of experts and designed with a computer's analysis, have produced "bionic woman" headlines and added to her aura of invincibility.

Her domination has been almost complete Evert Lloyd and began widening the gap between them. In 1982, Navratilova won 90 of 93 matches and 15 of 18 tournaments, losing only to Evert, Pam Shriver and Sylvia Hanika. Last year, she lost only once in 87 matches and 17 commaments, to Kathy Horvath in the French

The Women's Tennis Association has kept ear-by-year records only since 1973, but it is loubtful that anyone has ever won 99 percent of he time, as Navratilova did in the 1983 season, which ends officially this week with a tourna-

In two tournaments this year, she has already 15st a match, to Hana Mandlikova, yet there is is now a public relations official for the women's take something away from her, trying to take o significant feeling of hope or confidence mong her opponents.

"I don't think anyone has ever played as good that's the attitude. I remember when Chris was as she is right now," said Wade, after winning winning all her matches, players went out just to only two games from Navratilova in a 47-min-win a game. But with Chris, you could lose love New Jersey.

An informal survey of players at the tournasent indicated that Navratilova's overwhelming success had intimidated almost everyone else in the field. It is not just that she wins, but how - steamrolling through matches of less than an hour and rarely losing as many as half a dozen games. Most of her colleagues said they approach a match with her hoping only to win enough games to escape embarrassment.

"It's nice to know I'm getting that kind of respect," said Navratilova, who still smarts from a lack of recognition earlier in her career, "But I can't go into a match thinking I've got it made because they're lying down and playing dead."

Evert, who inspired the same reaction in the mid-1970s but has lost to Navratilova in their last eight meetings (including the weekend's straight-sets final), said: "A lot of the players, maybe 98 percent, go out there just wanting to since 1982, when she moved ahead of Chris get two or three games. The serve-and-volley players, such as Shriver, have the best chance to succeed against Navratilova, but there are fewer of them these days. "Nobody plays her right," said Billie Jean King, "We need more net rushers. Kathy Jordan and Jo Durie try to play her right within what they've got. Who else? Pam? Hana? Chris got all the kids to play her way. It's the worst way to beat Martina, and Chris is the only one who plays it at a level to do that."

JoAnne Russell, the only one other than Evert who said she played Navratilova expecting to win, observed that she would not be as confident if she were a baseliner.

"Imagine how it preys on your psyche if you're a baseliner and you can't win a rally," she said, "What's left? You have no guns. All you can hope for is a great day with your passing Navratilova agreed. "A good serve-and-vol-

Lockridge, who weighed pounds 128½ (58.3 kilograms) stepped inside a Mayweather left jab and threw a perfect, short right that sent the champion sprawling face forward. Mayweather rose to his knees, but was unable to beat referce Larry Bozadilla's count. He was assisted by two ringside doctors and his handlers to a stool but was still dazed several minutes after the Lockridge, 25, improved his re-cord to 33-3 with 27 knockouts. Mayweather, 22, who weighed in at the 130-pound limit, suffered his first loss in an 18-bout career.

"I was more amazed than the people watching the fight," said the new champion. "I was jabbing and got inside on him. I threw a little shot to the body and then I just came over with the right hand."

"The first round is always a cold round and its anybody's at that point," said Mayweather. "I gotcaught cold probably because I had such a long layoff" — six months.
"I was rusty but yet I didn't feel rusty. You always think that you're more prepared than you are at that point. So I don't really have any excuses. He just caught me quick-

Lockridge had lost a pair of 15-round decisions to WBA featherweight champion Eusebio Pedroza in two prior title fights.

The fight was Lockridge's first as a junior lightweight after a long campaign as a featherweight.

His first loss to Pedroza in October 1980 ended in a split verdict for the champion. The second, in April of last year, was a unanimous deci-sion for Pedroza.

Mayweather won the title from Sammy Serrano in January 1983 and defended successfully twice.

Cutting Through a Code Inspirational: The guy can't play,

By Jim Murray

Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES - In a recent issue of Time magazine, writer John Leo dealt with one of the intriguing problems of our day: how to read your newspaper. The trick is to cut right through the code words, to decipher the real meaning behind the surface prose.

For instance, he quotes Richard Cohen of The Washington Post. who recalls his indoctrination into the arts and mysteries of journalism-speak when he was a young cub sent out to interview a lawyer who had always been identified in print as "ruddy-faced." The man, reported Cohen, was "woozily abusive" and given to lurching about unsteadily. "Cohen instantly realized the real meaning of ruddyfaced is drunk."

That's the way the deadline crumbles. Leo cites other instances of a spiritual malaise wherein the typewriter just seems to ink in its own cliché without conscious effort on the part of the writer. The Middle East is "strife-torn," Leo says - unless peace breaks out, when it becomes "much-moubled." And then there are readers in the United States who think the right title of the group is "The Outlawed Irish Republican Army." Individuals get labeled with similar buzzwords. "Imposing," Leo points out, means just what it says when it is applied to a man. Applied to a woman, it means battle-"Missions" are always "fact-

"We didn't count on the fact that the Christian soldiers would not take orders from their Moslem officers, and the Moslem soldiers would not take orders from their Christian officers." "Why not?"

"Because we found out recently the Christians and the Moslems hate each other."

"Didn't we know that when we gave the army all that equipment? "Of course not. How could we know something like that?" "It's been public knowledge for the last 2,000 years." "It was our opinion that the religious differences would play no part once everyone wore the same uniform. officers gave orders to shoot the Moslem soldiers, and the Moslem officers gave orders to shoot the Christian soldiers. That's when we realized we had a morale problem on our hands."

"Was the president informed about this?"

"I imagine he was. But our advisers were instructed not to worry about it, because the U.S. Navy would fire on Syrian-supported rebel positions to protect the Leba-nese Army soldiers from killing each other.

Apparently the strategy didn't

There was a mix up in signals. The White House said we were only firing at the Moslems to protect the U. S. Marine peacekeeping force, and the secretary of the Navy said we were shelling the Druze to support Gemayel's troops. Before this could be straightened out, the Druze started their own offensive against Christian positions, and this was the signal for the Moslem soldiers to stop fighting."
"So now the Moslems have half our arms, and the Christians have the other half. What did we accomplish by training the Lebanese

"It gave the president an excuse to move the Marines out of Lebanon, something he's been wanting to do for some time."

"That's a big plus. But wouldn't you say this was a blow to President Reagan's Mideast policy?" "He doesn't seem to think so. After all there is a lot more at stake in the Middle East than what happens in a tiny country like Leba-non. Once the Christians and Moslems settle their feud amongst themselves we can get back on the track again."

Shohei Imamura, the Tofu Maker

Film Director Prefers Peasant Vitality to Samurai Tradition

By Christine Chapman International Herald Tribune

COKYO - Shohei Imamura accepts as history the Japanese legend of taking the elders of the village up to the mountain and leaving them there to die when they reach 70. His movie about the custom, "The Ballad of Narayama," has just won the Japanese Academy Award for best movie of 1983. in addition to the 1983 Cannes film festival's Golden Palm. Described as "pornographic." "beautiful" and as "raw realism," the film has raised questions over the authenticity of the custom known as obasute. "I believe in obasute," Imamura, 57, said simply during a recent interview. "I found evidence in three villages that it existed. It happened in Japan and in old China, in Eastern Europe and among the American Indians and Eskimos. If one human baby is born, an old person must go to Narayama to keep the population balanced." In the film, an elder son agonizes over the decision to carry his mother, Orin, up to Narayama, the oak mountain. At almost 70, Orin is so strong and healthy that she knocks out her two front teeth to appear old. Unlike her neighbor, who hysterically resists being dragged up the mountain, the old woman embraces the idea of returning to nature among the bleached bones of her predeces-

Through image after shocking image, Imamura reveals the necessity for the fateful trip: extreme poverty, a limited food supply, the pressure of new births and a primitive belief in population control that involved not only casting off the aged but a taboo on sex for all sons except the eldest.

Set in an isolated village in northern Japan 150 years ago, "Narayama-Bushi-Ko," its Japanese title, vividly depicts the cruelty of peasant life: the burying alive of a whole family by irate villagers, a bloated dead baby floating in a mountain stream, the shackling of the querulous old man who does not want

Such scenes are contrasted with robust shots of the coupling of lovers, of a country festival, of work in the fields and fornication with animals. Imamura is in love with the vulgarity and the vitality of the common people, or shomin. He believes that shomin culture, not that of the samurai warrior class, is the true culture of Japan.

"I am part of shomin," he explained. "My grandfather was a farmer, but my father became a doctor. In the 1920s, when I was a child, 85 percent of Japanese were farmers. Shomin life interests me, for it has more vitality than the tea-ceremony tradition of samurai. To be samurai is to be idealistic, brave, to know shame, things which are taught in school. Shomin is realistic, vigorous. Both aspects of the culture exist in Japan today and influence each other."

am realistic as a director," Imamura insisted, "not as a person. Being a director, making movies, is rather romantic, not like being an ordinary man on a salary." "The Ballad of Narayama" is based on a 1956 prize-winning novel by a professional guitarist who became a farmer, Shichiro Fu-kazawa. Now approaching 70, Fukazawa is reported to be displeased with the two film versions of his book. He described Keisuke Kinoshita's 1958 version as "tear-jerking," and Imamura's as pornographic.

Although he has been known in Japan for at least two decades, Imamura has finally received international recognition. "The Ballad of Narayama" has so far played in several European countries and in Hong Kong, as well as in film festivals. Imamura recently attended festivals in Moscow and Bombay, where he lectured about the movie. He is a modest man and refused to go to Cannes for his award, despite the urgings of the Toei Distribution company, which financed the film. His reason: "I'm afraid of planes and I hate parties. I was born

He also disapproves of film competitions, and had not intended to present "The Ballad of Narayama" at Cannes, because it was The spring scene in the village had not been shot," he explained, "because snow was still on the ground. Toei offered more money to get it done. They cleared the snow with a buildozer after flying the parts up to the village by helicopter."

In 25 years as a director, Imamura has made 15 films, including "Pigs and Battle-ships" (1961), about poor Japanese and the U.S. Navy in Yokosuka, "Insect Woman" (1963), "Vengeance is Mine" (1979) and "Eijanaika" (1981), which portrays low-life Ja-pan in the last days of the 19th-century Edo period. When the production company backing him failed, Imamura made documentaries for television. Joseph L. Anderson and Donald Richie, in

"The Japanese Film: Art and Industry," credit Imamura with "one of the most distinctive styles" in film today, emphasizing that he sees Japan as a "technological tribe" "controlled by the most basic (and the most natural) of urges, compulsions and supersti-

"Making a film is like making tofu, or bean curd." Imamura said, recalling the words of the director Yasujiro Ozu, for whom he worked as assistant. "Ozu called himself a tofu-maker because he always made home dramas. I make the shomin in history." It was after seeing the movies of Akira Kurosawa, the only other Japanese director to win the Golden Palm at Cannes (for "Kagemusha" in 1980), that Imamura became interested in the cinema as a profession.

He was born in 1926, and was 18 and due to be recruited when the emperor announced Japan's defeat in World War II. He had feared he would die on the beaches of Chiba, Japan's Pacific Ocean coast and had thought he would never live to 20 or 30. "It gave me unlimited freedom," he said.

Imamura hopes to make two or three more films, but is busy for the moment with his directing school in Yokohama, the Broad-casting and Movie Technical School, where testing and Movie Technical School, where the testing and directing an old drama. He wrote the script for "The Ballad of Narayama" and calls writing his greatest plea-

"I want to make a good play," he said, "For the real shomin who want to cry and laugh and have a good time." After the play, he may make another mov-although, according to film-industry superstition, he noted, the one produced after a winner usually fails. It takes him two to three years to make a film, which means he will have time for three more before he's 70. 'Then," Imamura said, "I'll follow nature. I'll go to Narayama."

The official search for the Japaaese adventurer Naomi Uemura, 44, was called off Sunday in the belief that the man who made the first solo winter climb of Mount. McKinley, Alaska, North America's highest mountain, is dead and buried under the snows. "In my opinion, it is almost conclusive he is dead," said the veteran U.S. climber Jim Wickwire, who helped lead a six-day search for Ucmura. Uemura reported Feb. 13 by short-wave radio that he reached McKinley's 20,320-foot (6,190-meter): summit Feb. 12. He was last seen on Feb. 16 when a bush pilot spotted him 4,000 feet below the top. Uemura, who has scaled the highest peaks on every continent except Antarctica, began climbing Mc-Kinley Feb. 1 and was due to return to his base camp Feb. 15. п.
